

Come and explore Tunbridge Wells and Rusthall Commons – the Countryside in the Town

Two national property companies with investments in Tunbridge Wells - Targetfollow and Dandara, along with the Friends of Tunbridge Wells and Rusthall Commons have co-funded and commissioned ten new information panels which have been installed at strategic locations across the two Commons. The local community and tourists are encouraged to come and explore the 256 acres of common land including woods, heathland, lakes, ponds and springs, located to the west of Tunbridge Wells.

Targetfollow, a property investment, development and asset management company own and manage the historic and famous Upper Pantiles, and as owners of the Commons are proud to work together with the other Commons Conservators in the important role of maintaining and preserving them for the benefit and enjoyment of all.

Dandara, a property development company are currently redeveloping Union House to provide residential accommodation, retail units and community spaces.

The Friends of Tunbridge Wells and Rusthall Commons support the work of the Commons Conservators to make the Commons a wonderful place to enjoy for generations to come.

Tunbridge Wells and Rusthall Commons are famous for their unique sandstone outcrops including Toad Rock and Wellington Rocks. The Commons are also home to communities, two cricket clubs, a children's nursery, churches and pubs.

The panels have been designed by heritage interpretation experts HDC International and are made of high quality sustainable materials. Each panel provides a map showing the location, history of the Commons and specific features, creatures, flora and fauna that can be found there.

Paul Burnett, Associate Director of Targetfollow commented “the new information panels look fantastic and are a welcome addition to Tunbridge Wells and Rusthall Commons – they will encourage both residents and tourists alike to explore and learn about the beauty and diversity of the 256 acres of Commons – the countryside in the town”.
